The non-verbal communication is not a communication process without using words or sounds. Press conferences, board meetings and team meetings are examples of group communication. The non-verbal communication uses gestures, body language, facial expressions, eye contact, clothing, voice tone and other clues to transmit a message. Effective messaging receivers should try to overcome their own attitudinal barriers to facilitate effective communication. Verbal communication This mode of communication depends on words to transmit a message. For most of us, comes easily. There are verbal and not verbal clues that transmit active listening. This communication process when analyzed can be verbally transmitted to someone or become confined as thoughts. "Active Action" means, as the name suggests, actively listening. Soon we develop and begin to understand the language that helps us communicate to us verbally as we grow older. For example, a message that includes a lot of jargon and specialized abbreviations will not be understood by a receiver that is familiar with the terminology used. The intention of feedback should be to promote speaker skills. As children, we learned the verbal communication through the sounds around us. However, even when communicating in the same language, the terminology used in a message can act as a barrier if it is not fully understood by receiver (s). You can also allow the listener to ask questions to clarify any points. Cones and Emotions are a form of visual communication. Visual communication This form of communication involves the visual display of information, in which the message is understood or expressed with the help of visual resources. There are many reasons why interpersonal communications can fail. Verbal communication is even more divided into subcategories: intrapersonal communication This form of communication is extremely private private restricted to us. Letters, personal periods, emails, relatives, articles and memos are some forms of communication in writing. The visual communication also involves the transfer of information in the form of text, which is received by means of an electronics, such as a computer, telephone, etc. As verbal communication, this multi-communication method is rarely used alone. This is the communication pattern that most uses in a day-to-day basis, although we rarely use without increasing with one of the other types of communication. Interpersonal communication This form of communication occurs between two individuals and is, therefore, an one-on-one conversation. Offering verbal signs of active audience can also be useful. Here, the two individuals involved will exchange your sender and receiver papers to communicate more clearly. Although modern technology often serves to reduce the impact of the physical barriers, the advantages and disadvantages of each communication channel must be understood so that an appropriate channel can be used to overcome the physical barriers. An important tool to use when speaking is a pause occasionally and ask questions to ensure that your message is being understood as intended. Generally, people with low self-esteem can be less assertive and therefore may not feel comfortable à Ć - communication - they may feel tender about saying how they really get They feel, or read negative sub-texts in messages they hear. Electoral campaigns and Public speeches are an example of this type of communication. In such cases, usually there is a single information sender and several receivers that are being addressed. Use simple language, it is important to remember the public that you are talking about and use the language that can be easily understood. Unless a specific issue is being discussed, the small discussions of the group can Caectic and difficult to interpret by all. Movies d. and. Television shows and video clips are all electronic form of visual communication. Psychological Barriers The psychological state of the receiver will influence how the message is received. This will strengthen the interpersonal relationship and increase future communications. We must remember to use the language that can be understood by the receiver. These non verbal suggestions convey the message that you are interested in what the speaker has to say, and that his attention is fully invested. Avoid using terminology or media jargon when talking to customers and their families. Other clues that people use while communicating verbally include, tone, gestures and body language. This delay in the understanding of information can result completely in a lack of communication. This is focusing fully on what is being said, rather than just "hypothesis" the speaker's message. Stress management is an important personal skill that affects our interpersonal relationships. Communication is usually easier over shorter distances as more communication channels are available and less technology is necessary. For example, if someone has personal concerns and is emphasized, they may be concerned about personal concerns and not receptive to the message as if they were not stressed. While feedback you give the speaker / sender can occasionally be negative, it is important to be constructive in nature. This form of communication encapsulates the characteristics of visual communication, especially when messages are transmitted through electronic devices such as laptops, telephones and visual presentations involving the use of text or words. The four types of communication mentioned above played a vital role and continue to do so, bridge the gap between people, with race, education, health care and entertainment. When we are angry, it is Say things we can later moan and also to interpret bad what others are saying. A phone phone Chat with a friend, an announcement made, or a speech delivered are all verbal forms of communication. Constructive feedback Remember that feedback was part of the communication chain that we analyze the first page. Public communication This type of communication occurs when an individual addresses a great meeting of people. Anger is another example of a psychological barrier to communication. All these visual features require us to see the screen to understand the message being transmitted. Not verbal communication can be considered as a spice we use when communicating to add a little flavor. Active listening involves listening with all the senses. One of the biggest examples of visual communication is the Internet, which communicates with the masses using a combination of text, design, links, images and color. Here the number of people will be small enough to allow each participant to interact and talk to the rest. Active activity activity is a skill that can be acquired and developed with the practice. Small group communication This type of communication can only occur when there are more than two people involved. Attitudinal barriers Attitudinal barriers are behaviors or perceptions that prevent people from communicating effectively. By providing this feedback, the person who speaks usually will feel more at will and therefore communicating more easily, openly and honestly. Verbal communication helps express thoughts, emotions and feelings. For example, a receptor with reduced audition may not grab the totality of a spoken conversation, especially if there is a significant background. People are often intimidated by such language, and may be afraid to admit they do not understand the message being delivered. However, this ability can be difficult to master and therefore take time and patience. When these icons are used - à Ć
